Mayor asks revision in appoinments policy

Seaside Mayor B. J. Dolan, Jr. has informed members of the city council the past practice of majority council commission appointments is contrary to state law, and he has taken steps to comply with the law in future appointments to boards and commissions ordained by the City of Seaside.

The context of his message as submitted in outline to the Post News-Sentinel, reads as follows:

"As you all know, I have been devoting all my time to the responsibilities of the office to which I was elected. I have had ample time to become acquainted with the laws of the State of California as they pertain to general law cities, as well as review city ordinances and policies adopted by this and previous councils.

"In reviewing the past policies of the council concerning appointments to various commissions, I find that we are in conflict with state law in that the recent law effective Nov. 23, 1970 provides that the mayor of a general law city who is elected by popular vote rather than by his colleagues on the council shall appoint members of duly ordained commissions in the community.

"In researching this law, I have concluded that the apparent reason for such enactment by the state legislature was basically to provide an elected mayor the same opportunity to implement his programs which he espoused before he was elected, as a governor or president has when selecting his cabinet members.

"In addition, there is always criticism of our boards and commissions and the membership appointments, and naturally the head of the administration receives the brunt of the criticism. Mayoral appointments will not lessen this appreciably, but the council members themselves probably would be spared this embarrassment.

"Commencing this date, the policy of commission appointments shall conform to state law. In implementing the law, this policy will have the following effects:

"Eliminate the unlawful practices presently followed by the council.

"Provide the mayor the opportunity to recommend appointees to the council who he believes will assist in implementing his programs and those of the city in general.

"Lessen criticism against other members of the council when such criticism is directed toward them as the appointing authority, some of which I have heard recently.

"It must be understood that although the mayor is required by law to make these appointments, he cannot do so without concurrence of the council. The law is specific in that it requires council ratification of all mayoral appointments much the same as Presidential cabinet appointees must have the approval of the Senate."

Awards dinner slated

The Monterey Peninsula United Fund's annual awards dinner will be held on Friday, Feb. 7.

Fund President Robert C. Pelz said the event will begin at 6:30 p.m. with no-host cocktails, and that dinner will be served at 7:30 p.m.

Pelz also said the evening's agenda will include election of the UF officers for 1975, and announcement of the final contribution figures for the 1974 campaign.

"The highlight of the dinner will be the presentation of awards to those outstanding volunteers who contributed so much time and energy to the drive.

"And with that in mind, we hope that all those who are directly responsible for this successful campaign, namely the volunteer workers who called on the community, will attend so that we can personally thank them for their dedicated efforts."

"The public is also invited to attend.

Transit schedule altered

Monterey Peninsula Transit Chairman Hugh Bayless has announced schedule adjustments which will go into effect Saturday, Jan. 25.

Night bus service will no longer be provided throughout the system after Jan. 24. Instead, starting Feb. 3, Monterey Peninsula Transit with Monterey Peninsula College will provide direct bus service from Pacific Grove, Monterey, Seaside, and Marina to MPC. This service will be free to those attending MPC classes. A separate schedule for night service will be issued.

Daytime schedules remain unchanged except for several minor adjustments in departure times along the routes. Patrons are advised to obtain a copy of the new schedule at any of the city halls in the area or from the drivers on board the bus. Schedule information can also be obtained by calling 372-4494.

Dolphins visit recycling plant

By Margret Hennessy

The Seaside Dolphins' second grade Blue Birds went on a field trip to the recycling center in Salinas. The man weighed the cans. They dumped them in the big box and gave us the money.

It was a beautiful, warm day. We went back to our meeting place. We are planning a field trip to McDonald's. Our next craft will be to hand-weave a collar without a loom.

We will use a board and nails. We are going to enter them in the Santa Lucia Council of Camp Fire Girls' Art Contest. The Monterey Peninsula members of the council will be needing things for the rummage sale in March - if you have things to donate, call 394-5203.

Community development program being implemented

Seaside's Department of Community Development and Planning is asking special interest groups to give the city an indication of their needs and desires for implementation of a massive, federally-assisted, community development program.

The city applied to the Department of Housing and Urban Development last December for federal funds in the amount of $1,724,000 for that purpose, which will be supplemented by local and other funds for a total project budget of $2,384,474.

Under the 1974 Omnibus Community Development Act signed into law by President Ford, pre-existing neighborhood development plans were consolidated into community programs, to be funded through federal block grants.

That means that the type of community development undertaken by cities, such as Seaside, since the 1960s which resulted in such local projects as the Gateway Project and Laguna Grande, now will be financed and administered differently.

It's a whole new ball game for city planners, and William Burris, Seaside's chief planner, now has a new title to match his new duties: community development-planning director. He also has a new man on the staff, Finnly Sutton, who specializes in handling the city's applications for community development funds and whose title is community development coordinator.

"The Community Development Act of 1974 eliminated neighborhood development funds and projects, and continuing urban renewal projects will now receive their funds through the city rather than through HUD," Burris said.

Besides changing all the paper work and the structure of community development projects, the feds have also added more bulk to the weight of applications required for such endeavors. Now, each element of a community development program must have its own environmental impact report, as well as the program as a whole, Burris explained.

These EIRs for Seaside's community development project are now being processed through state and regional agencies, including the Association of Monterey Bay Area Governments.

What it all adds up to is that those community development projects already begun, will continue under a different means of financing, and the proposed new projects will be launched only after considerable red tape is severed.

One of the important elements in the community development project is the inclusion of a housing assistance plan. In a memo to the city council, City Mgr. Dudley Lapham pointed out that a recent city-wide survey indicated total estimated housing inventory of 7,076 dwelling units.

Of the 7,076 dwelling units, 107 were declared vacant as of November 26, 1974, and 4,166 were deemed suitable for rehabilitation. A total of 438 were designated not suitable for rehabilitation and the balance of the units were said to be in good condition.

In other words, the majority of the dwelling units in Seaside, according to the information presented in Lapham's memo, are considered suitable for some kind of rehabilitation.

Lapham also noted that 167 households of families that are Seaside residents require housing assistance, and that all of those low-income households have qualified for assistance and are awaiting a dwelling unit. Among those 167 households were 25 elderly families, Lapham said.

Included in the budget for the community development program is $250,000 for rehabilitation loans and grants, as well as $853,576 for the completion of urban renewal projects. A total of $440,500 is set aside for public works, facilities and site improvements, and another $122,000 for the acquisition of real property.

Another important part of the community development program is a social element which will be adopted as a part of the city's general plan, Burris said. A 12-member committee has been named to study social needs and to advise the city council, with membership representing the city council, planning commission, parks and recreation commission, human relations commission, the redevelopment agency, the county housing authority, and the Seaside Chamber of Commerce and five at-large members.

Various concerns ranging from the need for a community center to a city-sponsored recycling program were expressed in a public hearing on community development needs last December.

In addition, the community development-planning department will assemble a staff of people in the spring for a door-to-door city survey of community needs, Burris said. All of this data will then be compiled for consideration at the time a social element is adopted into the general plan.

One direct benefit to the city of a social element, which may dovetail with the community development program, is that various groups approaching the city council for funds will be given even-handed treatment, Burris noted. Also, it will give the city council some yardstick for estimating the relative importance of various groups' activities compared to the total concerns of the community.

"There's no other city in the state that has gone as far as we have with this," Burris said.

Responding to one already-clear need in the community, the city council has decided to place before voters a referendum which would authorize the city to enter into an agreement with the county housing authority for the construction and operation of senior citizens' housing in Seaside.

Burris said the community development program is expected to bring as much as $8 million in federal funds into Seaside for that purpose during the next six years.

Seaside gets county funds

Seaside has received an additional $35,086.00 in "Aid to Cities" funds from Monterey County.

The city had requested these county funds to aid in financing their Highway 218 Realignment Project. The total project cost will be approximately $280,000.

The county's "Aid to Cities" program financially assists the cities within the county to improve their Select Street Systems which are a part of the countywide network of important roads.

Lockwood heads Easter Seal drive

Dr. Harold D. Lockwood of Carmel has been appointed general chairman of the 1975 Easter Seal Campaign for the Monterey Peninsula. Lockwood also serves as vice president of the organization. Jay Hopkins, president of the Easter Seal Society, said Lockwood will lead our volunteers in seeking a total of $16,500 to finance services for the handicapped children and adults of the Monterey Peninsula. This year's campaign to raise funds will be conducted Feb. 24 through Easter Sunday, March 30.

Lockwood said the society's primary form of collecting funds is through letters containing Easter Seals, and 34,000 letters will be mailed to Peninsula homes by Feb. 24. Last year the Peninsula campaign raised $12,800. More that 82 per cent of the contributions are used to aid disabled persons on the Peninsula, Lockwood said. The remaining portions go to statewide services and research projects throughout the country.

The society serves the disabled and their families with information and referral services, transportation to medical centers, purchase of orthopedic shoes, purchase of prosthetic aids and specialized appliances, wheelchairs, medical care and treatment, a special summer camping program for handicapped youngsters and young adults and a variety of additional services. Last year alone, your society served more than 460 clients with no charge.

Volunteers are needed in this preparation of the mail campaign. Lockwood asked that all service clubs, church groups or individuals interested in helping, contact the Easter Seal Society office in Monterey. Telephone: 373-2333.

Special educational program designed

Of note to Peninsula residents who may be seeking ways to continue an education is that La Verne College is in the process of establishing a field studies center on the Monterey Peninsula and will offer courses leading to masters degrees and specialists credentials.

All courses will be offered on the Peninsula, and additional programs will be arranged as the demand arises.

The first master's program will be offered in reading. Registration for the first class will be held from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. Wednesday, Jan. 29, at the Instructional Materials Center, 540 Canyon Del Rey. The first class session will be that evening from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m.

A person who completes the work in this program will also meet the requirements for the new California Reading Specialist Credential with perhaps one extra course. This credential can be obtained only through a college.

Folk dance workshop to be given

Atanas Kolarovski, a foremost authority on Macedonian Folk Dance, will present a two-hour workshop in the Monterey Peninsula College Armory at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, January 30.

Kolarovski was for many years the lead dancer and choreographer for "Ansambl Tanec," the Yugoslav National Folk Ballet. His dances have enjoyed enduring popularity among the many dance groups in California.

Macedonian dances are basically line dances, somewhat similar to those of Greece and do not require a partner. The dances taught by Kolarovski will be suitable for beginning and advanced dancers alike.

Admission to the dance workshop will be $1.

Letters

On behalf of the board of directors of the Monterey Peninsula Youth Project, I would like to express our appreciation to the Seaside Post News-Sentinel for the article on The New Connection drug detoxification facility. This excellent and well-balanced article will help to inform the citizens of our area about an important community problem, and of the efforts that are being made to alleviate this problem. Our job cannot be done unless people are informed and unless they care.

Many thanks for the help.

Right to Learn program aims at under-achieving students

By ROBERT MISKIMON

Why Johnny can't read is no less important a question at Martin Luther King Junior High School than how he can be helped to learn to read.

Both questions are central to the school's Right to Learn program, which is targeted at the disaffected, the discouraged, and the low-achievers. Fully 39 per cent of the incoming seventh grade students at King have test-identified serious reading deficiencies, said librarian Mrs. Helen Rucker, who heads a four-man committee implementing the Right to Learn program.

Another 28 per cent of the incoming seventh graders read below the level of speed and comprehension considered average for their grade level, and only 33 per cent read at or above grade level.

Since reading is the key to every other field of learning, it is a vital skill which must be learned, and through a learning center established in the school library, various media including tape recordings and films are used to stimulate children to learn, in hopes their reading will then catch up with their curiosity.

The Right to Learn program at King is being implemented under the auspices and through the assistance of the State Department of Education, which has established four primary steps in setting up such a program: communication, evaluation, learning and change.

The four-man committee steering the program is now in the evaluation stage and is conducting a comprehensive needs assessment throughout the school to see what possible instructional and curricular changes might advance the goals of Right to Read.

"The first two steps will evaluate where the school is now," Mrs. Rucker explained. "We're at the end of the second step now. We will look at our weaknesses, one of which is a lack of basic skills in reading, writing and math. All of our other problems are symptoms of this problem."

Mrs. Rucker said many of the incoming seventh grade students have not mastered the basic learning skills, although "we do not indict the elementary schools here.

"In this district, the kindergarten through third grade reading scores are great. But at four, five and six we fall flat on our face--this is a statewide problem."

The other three members of the committee on Right to Learn are Mary Mitchell, a teacher's aide; Rena Di Girolamo, a teacher; and Judy Wyckoff, a counselor; plus two students and one parent, who function as advisors to the committee.

At present, the committee is tabulating the results of a random sample survey of student attitudes toward learning. The survey was conducted school-wide and produced 140 responses from the total student population of 700. Results of this survey will guide the committee in deciding what changes are needed to improve learning in the basic areas, Mrs. Rucker said.

Already, there is strong evidence that many factors involved in poor learning have a carry-over effect: the poor reader may also be a discipline problem and a sporadic school attender. Of primary importance in the assessment portion of Right to Learn is the broad picture of the education process which would not orginarily be revealed to individual teachers or administrators, working in their specialized areas, Mrs. Rucker pointed out.

"But the absentee rate is way down this year," she said. "We've really worked on it. We call parents, and we have an attendance clerk and two community counselors. And the drug problems have gone down at the junior high school level."

Martin Luther King Junior High School has the heaviest concentration of black students in the Monterey Peninsula Unified School District this year, with 55.4 per cent in that category. That's an increase of 4.7 per cent over last year, Mrs. Rucker said.

There's a strong indication that this fact needs to be weighed and somehow incorporated into whatever changes are brought about in an effort to improve learning skills, she stressed. For the benefit of teachers who have black studies courses, and for anyone else on the school staff interested, a black studies course was instituted this month.

The school district has an affirmative action hiring program designed to increase the number of minority teachers in the district, but only eight of the 34 teachers at King this year are blacks.

But Mrs. Rucker is quick to add, also, that students don't necessarily respond better to teachers of their own race, and the important factor in learning is getting students motivated and concerned for their own futures.

In an earlier effort to attack the same lerning problems to which Right to Learn is addressed, Mrs. Rucker wrote a successful application for $69,000 in federal funds througn Title II of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act which resulted in the creation of the learning center of the school library.

There, as many as 18 students at one time can plug themselves into listening booths for learning experiences that go beyond the traditional classroom approach.

"I'm not totally convinced that reading is the only way people can get information," Mrs. Rucker said. "Hopefully, I see people getting literate enough to appreciate books, and I'm seeing evidence that it works."

Despite all the focus on the needs of the poor readers, the ESEA program at King can accommodate only 150 of the 495 students identified as having deficiencies in basic learning skills. A special teacher handles another 100 such students, but that leaves about half of the students with no special attention, Mrs. Rucker said.

The Right to Learn program at King is an expansion of the state-sponsored Right to Read program and will also focus on math and other basics. Funds from the school district in the amount of $1,500 have been allocated to the program to cover the costs of substitute teachers and typists.

"One of the things we must do is to evaluate the effect of the media center," Mrs. Rucker said. "The first year, the kids stole the tapes from the machines. Then I told them they were responsible for the equipment, and it's been declining."

"We, the schools, are failing the kids," she said. "This has got to be the biggest challenge in education today. I hope the end product will be that we can re-structure what we're doing at this school."

Pair of films to be screened

The final films in Monterey Peninsula College's nine-part Fall Film Gallery will feature Alec Guinness in "The Lavender Hill Mob," and Peter Sellers with Guinness in "The Lady Killers" at 8 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 1 in the MPC Theatre.

"The Lavender Hill Mob" finds Guinness playing a supposed meek bank clerk as he and his Lavender Hill Mob perpetrate one of the most daring robberies in the annals of comic cinema. The film stars Guinness, Stanely Holloway, Audrey Hepburn, Sidney James and Marjorie Fielding.

In "The Lady Killers," Sellers and Katie Johnson star with Guinness in a story of a misdirected gang of bank robbers whose plans are thwarted by a little old lady. Each of the six "ladykillers" has his chance to "rub the old girl out," but only their comic deaths result from their efforts.

Admission to the films is $1 for adults and 50 cents for children under 12 and ASMPC Cardholders. Golden Card Holders are free.

Friends of Photography features contemporary work

From Feb. 8 to March16, the Friends of Photography will present an exhibition consisting of the work of two contemporary photographers; Eikoh Hosoe and Ken Graves.

Eikoh Hosoe, one of Japan's distinguished photographers will be exhibited in the South Gallery. Hosoe is the winner of The Most Promising Photographer Award of Japan, Photo Critics Association (1960) and The Photographer of the Year Award of Japan, Photo Critics Association (1963).

He has had one man shows in Antwerp, Belgium, Amsterdam, Holland and New York City. A graduate and professor of Tokyo College of Photography, his teaching and freelance work have led him around the world, including the Ansel Adams Workshop in Yosemite Valley. His books include "Man and Woman," "Killed by Roses," "Ordeal by Roses" and "Embrace," which this exhibition will be based on. Eikoh Hosoe works with the nude in a manner which distinguishes him from most other photographers.

Ken Graves, winner of the Friends of Photography 1974 Ferguson Grant, will exhibit in the North Gallery. Graves was born and raised in San Jose, and received his M.F.A. degree in photography from the San Francisco Art Institute. He is a freelance photographer and most recent winner of the National Endowment for the Arts grant for Photography in 1975. His research will be into the "America Family Album, Photography as American Folk Art." He has been widely published in Creative Camera, Ramparts, Modern Photography, San Francisco Chronicle and the Los Angeles Times.

A most recent exhibition of his work was included in the New Photography in the Bay Area Show at the M.H. De Young Museum and Fine Arts Gallery of San Diego. Described by Tom Albright of the San Francisco Examiner, "His work is a totally devastating documentation of the nightmarish surrealism that pervades our most commonplace surroundings."

The public is cordially invited to a preview of the exhibition from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. Feb. 7 at the Friends of Photography Gallery, Sunset Center, Carmel. Gallery hours are from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Sunday. For further information, call 624-5330.

Upward Bound to conduct training session

The veterans "Upward Bound" program will begin its spring 1975 cycle as 75 newly enrolled veterans from the peninsula area begin a week-long orientation session at 8:30 a.m. Monday, Feb. 10 at the Veterans Center at 1760 Fremont Boulevard.

Wayne Purnell, Upward Bound director, said the program will include communication and mathematical skills development, group counseling, and electives. Purnell said full-time students are required to participate in the program for 25 hours per week with time divided among classes, counseling, tutoring, and individual projects.

"By the time a student has completed the 16-week program, he will have had the opportunity to improve academic skills, gain insight in a variety of subjects, and reach decisions concerning future educational and vocational plans," Purnell said.

Rick Turner, personal counselor for Upward Bound students, said interaction among all people in the program is important, and various kinds of group activities are planned to be both educational and entertaining.

In addition to the daily operation from 8:30 to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, classes will also be taught from 6 p.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday, to accommodate veterans who work.

Crippled Children Receive $500

Willie Richmond, Oakland, board member representing St. Anthony's Grand Lodge and Queen Esther Grand Chapter Order of the Eastern Star, Los Angeles, presented a $500 check last month in memory of Wendy Ann Wells to the Crippled Children Services of Alameda County Health Care Services Agency.

It will go into a trust fund in remembrance of Wendy Ann, granddaughter of Mrs. Helen Watts, who was also present at the ceremony. The fund will be used to purchase equipment for treatment of crippled children. The gift was made up of individual contributions from throughout the Lodge's statewide order.

In Feb. 1973, little Wendy Ann Wells, twin daughter of Mrs. Martha Ann Wells, Oakland, was brought into Crippled Children Services suffering from a brain stem tumor, which is found primarily in young children. Despite lengthy treatment and intensive care, five-year-old Wendy died last Aug 20.

The contributions were accepted by Dr. Morton Nelson, County Health Officer.

It's a hole-in-one!

Alcohol In Victims Blood

The driver of the work car killed in a BART train crash last Sunday night may have been drunk at the time, a coroner's report indicated Thursday.

The victim was Arthur Lee Briggs, 40, of Richmond, who was operating the work car when a nine-car, Richmond-bound train slammed into it at between 70-80 mph.

A toxicology report released late Wednesday by the Alameda County coroner's office showed Briggs' blood alcohol level was .11 per cent.

Chief Deputy Coroner Roland Prahl said this level is evidence Briggs "had been inbibing alcohol prior to the accident."

A blood alcohol level of .10 per cent has been established as the standard for court conviction in drunk driving cases, Prahl noted.

BART's acting general manager, Lawrence Dahms, declined comment on the coroner's findings. "We cannot comment on this evidentiary material in view of the inquiry (into the crash)," Dahms said.

Two other men were on the work car. One received minor injuries and the other jumped to safety. The driver of the train was unhurt.

Investigators are listening to tape recordings of conversations between Briggs, BART central and other vehicles to determine why the unit was on the wrong track.

GOMEZ ASSIGNED

Exhibit to continue at Carmel's Sunset Center

The current exhibit in the Marjorie Evans Gallery, 8th and San Carlos, in Carmel, is a traveling exhibition organized by The Smithsonian Institution and the Hungarian Institute for Cultural Relations. The graphics will be on display through Feb. 2 and may be viewed Monday through Friday, 1 p.m. to 5 p.m., and one hour before a performance in the Sunset Center Theatre.

The term graphics encompasses all the artistic reproductive processes such as woodcut, etching, engraving, lithography--all kinds of drawings. The 105 pieces exhibited in this showing are representative of the various techniques or a combination of them. In Hungarian graphics, figurative expression is of primary importance and representations of various kinds of several meanings are characteristic with the addition of the introduction of nature on an artistic level.

The graphics are characterized by dynamism, by a kind of Baroque-like mobility. The present exhibition is not the sum total of the Hungarian schools of graphic art and not a complete survey, yet it offers wide information about the Hungarian peop.e. It includes young, middle-aged, as older artists.

The beginning of the new flourishing of Hungarian reproductive graphics in the 1950s can be well defined and associated to the names of two artists, Koffan and Kondor. Head of the Department of Graphics at the College of Fine Arts, Budapest, Koffan taught his disciples all the techniques with their intricacies and also the ethical behavior of the artist. He made his disciples love the workshop and the "smell" of printing ink.

Kondor has never been a teacher. He had already reached the standard of mastery during his student days because of his dedication, his talent, and his ethics. He has created new graphics containing new sets of symbols and a new style.

There is no admission charge and everyone is invited to view this exhibit.

Spring semester registrations scheduled for MIFS

Spring semester registration at the Monterey Institute of Foreign Studies is scheduled for Sunday, Feb. 2, from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m., with regular classes convening the following day, Monday, Feb. 3.

Several classes which will be of interest to the Peninsula community are being offered this session by the departments of International Economics and International Management, as well as the departments of Education and Asian Studies, and many others.

For the first time, local women are being urged to participate in a special course: "The Emerging Woman: Careers and Management." The subject is directed to those persons interested in exploring opportunities, problems, and new career directions for women.

The seminar would be of interest to those whose college education was interrupted, postponed or completed at an earlier point, and to those who might be interested in new career paths. The International Management Department, sponsor of the course, is finding a trend of increased interest among women in its program. Course enrollment is limited to 25 students.

The Department of Education is offering "Psychological Foundations of Education," "Special Topics: Methods and Materials of Teaching English As A Second Language," a course which would be beneficial if followed by a Summer Session workshop in "Spanish for Teachers," and "Children's Literature," which will deal with the art of storytelling and the creative use of literature in the elementary classroom.

Other offerings include, "Social and Political Change in Communist China," from the Asian Studies Department, and "Seminar: The Palestine Question," from the Department of Near East Studies.

Peninsula residents interested in these, or other courses should contact George Williams, Dean of Admissions, Monterey Institute of Foreign Studies, P.O.Box 1978, Monterey, or telephone, 649-3113.
